

TAC-The Alumni Connector

Volume I, Issue I

May 2004

From the Desk of the Chair

Thomas Regulus, Ph.D.

In this inaugural issue of TAC –The Alumni Connector, it is appropriate to reflect on the legacy of social work and southwestern Illinois. The legacy of the social work profession is grounded in ethical service to people and advocacy for social and economic justice. This legacy is frequently associated with giants of the profession: Jane Addams, Mary Richmond, Bertha Chapin Reynolds, E. Franklin Frazier, Whitney Young, and Consuelo W. Gosnell among others.

What is impressive and satisfying to me is that this legacy is alive and well at SIUE and in southwestern Illinois. The faculty of the Department of Social Work are building on and crafting their legacy of social work education, scholarship and service. Our alumni are also creating personal legacies of excellence in the region through administrative and service leadership. For example, Terri Smith, one of our alumnae, was awarded the Social Worker of the Year award by the Metro-East NASW, and Roger Boyd, on the cusp of completing his Ph.D., has returned to SIUE as a faculty member to teach a new generation of social workers in the region. Friends and practitioner colleagues alike have and are also creating legacies of their own. Peg Maher, former Executive Director of Hudelson Baptist Services, has left a large legacy as a role model in human service administration. The district chapters of NASW and the Illinois Association of School Social Workers have and are partnering with the Department to strengthen the social work education and practice connections within the region.

Legacy builders of social work in southwestern Illinois...

These illustrations are just a few of the countless social work legacy builders in southwestern, Illinois. Look around you, look at yourself, look at the builders of social work legacies.

MSW Program

Carl E. Bentelspacher, Ph.D., Associate Professor

The MSW Program has continued to grow and develop since its inception in 1997. At present, we admit 30-35 students each year to the program, and between 20-25 students graduate each year. We continue to offer concentrations in Children and Family Services and Health, Mental Health, and Disabilities Services. Also, we offer training in School Social Work. This past year, we began a review of the curriculum. Our primary aim is to strengthen course content related to knowledge and skills that are needed by generalist MSW practitioners in a variety of local community agencies. In this review process, we are considering the views of our faculty, current and former students, Field Supervisors, and community practitioners. It has been an exciting and informative process for all of us. We will keep you posted on our progress. Any changes to our curriculum will not occur before the Fall 2005 semester at the

BSW Program “Watch Us Grow”

Shirley J. Rakers, MSW- Undergraduate Program Director

In 1996, the Undergraduate Social Work Program had 90 majors. This year, the program has 135 and it is estimated that this number will continue to grow. As a result, the number of sections for practice classes such as SOCW 315 and SOCW 316, which have limited enrollment, have been increased to meet the demand. The department has been fortunate in meeting this challenge by bringing on board experienced practitioners from the community such as Sandra Becker-Warden, the founder and executive director of Family Life Consultants, who has been a private practice therapist since 1985, and provides extensive knowledge and experience for the students in our program. It is with the assistance of such community practitioners in conjunction with the talented department faculty that our program continues to excel during this time of expansion. We are grateful to all the talented adjunct faculty and field instructors who assist us in continuing

Reflections on Life

“Lo and Behold, I am a Social Worker” (Alex Brewington, MSW)

“I hope that you are well. Periodically, I review notes from classes and just remember my academic career at SIUE, and I wonder how my professors are doing. This is often, and unfortunately not reflected in any correspondence from me” writes Alex Brewington (MSW 2001) who now lives in Rockford, Illinois and works for the Rockford Public School District in a letter to Rev. Dr. Carol Wesley). Brewington wrote, “Lo and behold, I am a social worker. I was probably one before I went to school, but I am definitely living the life now. I am doing school social work with little kids and their families providing both direct and indirect services. I participate on the IEP team, provide consultations for teachers and other staff, facilitate parenting classes and behavior management workshops, provide therapy with little kids, counseling for families, and work with community agencies to access resources for families. It is rewarding work, work that keeps me busy and focused. I sit on a multidisciplinary committee on the special education team, and I am daily reminded about how important a role social workers play in the decisions that teams make about whether or not a child should qualify for special education services. I am always reminding my fellow colleagues about the role of culture and environment, the unique dance between a person and her environment. I rule out environmental and cultural factors or rule them in. If a child isn't learning because her home isn't functioning, then she probably is not a 'slow learner' but had limited learning experiences. It might be environmental. If a child isn't learning because his first language is Yugoslavian, and he has to speak English in school, he most likely doesn't have a speech and language disability but a cultural disadvantage.

“Lo and behold, I am a Social Worker”

The more I work, the more I am reminded about how my voice has to be the voice of so many who are disenfranchised, so many who are socially isolated or limited. Social work is not for cowards.
